UW-Superior's Master of Arts degree in Art offers students a professional degree program in arts administration, art education, art history, art therapy, studio art, and studio art-expressive ecopsychology.

Degree requirements allow flexibility to meet students' individual career and artistic goals. The program also provides an opportunity for students whose goals do not follow traditional schemes to pursue art studies and experiences related to professional studio objectives

Career paths for graduates are as diverse as the programs offered. Arts Administration students can prepare for work managing galleries and museums. Art Therapy students train to work in clinical settings providing therapy for emotionally and physically challenged people. Students focusing on Art History and Visual Arts enhance the development of their own work while preparing for a wide range of careers. Art Education students prepare for roles as educators.

- A wide range of studio art areas are available, including ceramics, fibers, painting, photography, sculpture, printmaking and expressive ecopsychology.
- Faculty advisors help students plan programs that meet their goals and fulfill degree requirements.
- Small classes allow personal attention from professors.
- Holden Fine and Applied Arts Center includes two art galleries and studios for painting, sculpture, ceramics, photography, printmaking, drawing, woodworking, metal work, weaving, and an expressive ecopsychology meditation room.
